THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSON.

May 4, "The Church at Antioch in Syria"-Acts XI, 19-30.

INTRODUCTION—Thus far the Book of Acts has been confined to a sketch of religious movements in great centers. Seven chapters showed what was done in Jerusalem until the death of Stephen. Philip's work in Samaria, and with the eunuch who returned to Ethiopia followed. Then the account of Paul's conversion on the way to Damassous was presented, and afterwards Peter's marvelous vision at Joppa and his service for Cornelius at Caesarea. Thus, with Jerusalem as the point of beginning, Samaria, Ethiopia, Damassus. Joppa and Caesarea are brought into the field of Christian effort. With this geographical expansion there had come juster views of the gospel's mission to reach Gentiles as well as Jews, to become a world-wide system of religion. The church had broken the bands of race distinction and was ready for its outward movements to the regions heyond. To-day we shall see how, in the providence of God, another center was established from which missionaries would be shortly sent out.

DISPERSION—(Verse 19—Attention 19 first called to the journeys of Christians from Jerusalem, (Dan. xii, 4.) They might have been content to remain in the national metropolis, where were the temple, synascipus, sacred books and places, learned men and schools, by which intellectual and social life received its highest stimulus. But the persecution that arose about Stephen (Acts vii, 53) directed against the lairly in the main (Acts vii, 14) compelled them to field the main (Acts vii, 14) compelled them to field the main (Acts vii, 15) directed against the lairly in the main (Acts vii, 16) compelled them to field the provide of the provide of

HARNABAS—(Verses 22-24) The congregation at Jerusalem, being the first body of organized Christians, exercised a kind of oversight for all new societies formed, perhaps holding this as a right or duty, perhaps to maintain unity and promote efficients. oversight for all new societies formed, perhaps holding this as a right or duty, perhaps holding this as a right or duty, perhaps to maintain unity and promote efficiency. Hence Peter was sent to Samarla to supervise Philip's work. (Acts viii, 14.) So now it was deemed proper to send one northward, stopping along the way, and coming at length to Antioch. Barnabas was chosen for this important mission. The selection is highly significant, inasmuch as he was not an apostle-indicating a tendency to call others into service. He is mentioned but twice before in Scripture-once in relation to the giving of his property to the church (Acts iv. 35 and 37), and once in his kindness to Saul. (Acts ix. 27.) What is most important, he is here declared to be a good man full of the Holy Ghost, just the one needed by the church in its earlier history. His ministry is aiso described in few words, both as to its character and

SAUL. (Verses 25 and 25.) There ways a favorable time and mode for instruction of a great man to his life. Antioch was honored as the first field apostle to the Gentiles. After his brigourn with the apostles in Jerusales in Je journ with the apostles in Jerusalem has fled from the enemy of the Jews to Caerarea and thence to Tarsus. (Acts xz. 32). There, in his native city (Acts xxi. 33), he remained in obscurity, with opportunity to study the philosophy of the heathen, the literature of the Jews and the doctrines of his new faith. On reaching Antioch, Barnabas thought of his old friend whom he considered the proper one, both by natural gifts and acquirements as well as by grace, to be an assistant or co-worker in the new church. He therefore made the journey, in those days a very tedious one, to Tarsus, perhaps 300 miles distant, and brought back this great man. One whole year the two thus the truths of the gospel, and during that time the disciples acquired the title of Christians.

FAMINE—(Verses 27 and 28.) At the end of a year the teaching of these men, so greatly profitable to the church, was interrupted by the introduction of secular matters. Among the prophets (preachers), who came to Antioch from Jerusalem, one named Agabus (Acts xxi, 10), had the ability to foretell events, as did the prophets and seers of the olden times. Under the illumination of the spirit, he predicted a world-wide famine. That does not necessarily mean that there would be a dearth of food in all countries at once, but that all countries would suffer, some perhaps more than others, the visitation being in a succession of years, first in one land, then in the other. The lesson informs us—and Josephus, Dio Cassius and Tacitus confirm the statement—that this prediction was actually fulfilled in the days of Claudius, who was then the Roman Emperor. In those days a famine was antidipated with much dread, both because of the discomfort and because it was supposed to Indicate the divine displeasure. (Gen. XII. 28.)

BENEVOLENCE—(Verses 23 and 30.) Adversity is favorable to the display of char-

discomfort and because it was supposed to indicate the divine displeasure. (Gen. xii. 25.)

BENEVOLENCE—(Verses 23 and 30.) Adversity is favorable to the display of character. Any temporal misfortune is, therefore, a blessing, because by it the real condition of the heart is manifest. (Psalm xxxi, 7.) The prospective famine gave occasion for the church at Antioch to exercise the grace of benevolence, one of the most beautiful of the virtues. (Matt. x. 8.) Having received the spiritual things from Jerusalem they resolved to return material benefits. (I Cor. ix, II.) It may have been that the famine had already renched Jerusalem, or that the mother church was poor, or that there was a plan of distribution already agreed on by which the destitute in all parts should receive aid as it was needed, out of a common store. However that may have been, the disciples at Antioch made up a fund, each contributing freely according to ability, and sent this by the hands of Barnabas and Saul to the Jerusalem elders. They gave of their substance and granted a vacation to their beloved ministers.

REFILECTIONS—I. Here is a commendable method of missionary work. Let all the Jerusalem elders. They gave of their substance and granted a vacation to their beloved ministers.

REFILECTIONS—I. Here is a commendable method of missionary work. Let all Christians wherever they go carry the gospel with them and seek to bring other men to Jesus Christ. 2. The faithful presentation of the truth, however, made, will bring forth fruit. Laymen and clergymen are allke in this—they are bearers of mestages which heard will do good. 3. When a new church is established it ought to be a time under the watchful care of an old church, and some good and wise man should be sent to arrange all things and instruct. 4. It is desirable that men of congenial spirit should be associated. Barnabas and Saul, both natives of that region, were prepared for sympathetic and concerted action. 5. A church is edified by the truth and teachers are therefore greatly needed who can unfold and explain the doctrine of Christ. 6. It often occurs that one man precedes to make way for another, as Barnabas for Saul. 7. The unity of Christ's followers prompts gifts in time of need.
